Types of

Orbs

- Technically, an orb is the display of light energy.
- They appear as transparent balls of light, usually whitish but sometimes in other colors such as blue, red, or green.
- They usually move around.
- They are often spotted at temples, cemeteries and graveyards.
- They are thought to be electromagnetic representations of the spirits of dead people.
- “False” orbs can be produced from natural light anomalies, including the reflection of water droplets or dust particles moving in the air or settling on camera lenses; the use of camera flash can also amplify these.

TOP 4 CASES of Orbs phenomenon

As orbs are one of the most common types of ghostly activity which occurs all around the world, there are countless instances that can be considered. But here are some that don't appear to come from light anomalies which greatly exemplify this curious phenomenon:

1. GHOST ORBS AT FORT GEORGE (PHOTO)

This is one of the best orb photos since we have orbs displayed at different depths against solid walls and ground from the foreground all the way to the background. It displays several orbs of varying sizes and colors – including a light purple one. Moreover, the three large orbs are translucent, as we can see the solid objects within (behind) them which largely eliminates the possibility of light anomalies.

2. OLD ISEGAMI (IYOGABI) TUNNEL IN JAPAN (3 PHOTOS)

The Old Isegami (Iyogabi) is considered one of the most haunted locations in Japan. The following three photographs which display several orbs in them that most would contend are the souls/spirits that sorrowfully lurk there after hundreds were buried alive in the tunnel following Super Typhoon Vera in 1965. In the first (of three) photos, we can see no less than four orbs in front of and behind one of the tunnel's lights on the ceiling; this largely eliminates the possibility of light anomalies. The third photo also shows orbs next to reflective traffic markers which would also chiefly eliminate light anomalies.

3. CURIOUS & RESPONSIVE WHITE ORB (VIDEO)

Creepy Seven Paranormal (on YouTube) posted a video of this seemingly curious and responsive orb that appears in a house's hallway. The person filming invites the orb to show itself and at one point it comes up straight in front of him and veers to his right through the staircase.

4. BRIGHT GREEN ORBS (VIDEO)

Also posted by Creepy Seven Paranormal, this one shows more than one green colored orbs roaming across this room. On three occasions, orbs make their way – as if curious – closer to the person filming and as they do they become brighter.
